Tit-for-tat trade war resumes

Summary

Event: US President Trump announced 100% new tariff on imports from China by 1 Nov, raising the rate to 130%, and imposed export controls on critical software, citing China's restrictions of rare earth and other critical minerals. China earlier added new port fees on US ships and started an anti-trust probe into US chip producer Qualcomm. It said it would take counter steps if the US persisted with the measures. It urged the US to resume talks to reach a trade deal.

Market reaction: Equities slumped, while government bonds, JPY, CHF and gold rose amid renewed trade tensions between the world's two largest economies. The S&P500 index tumbled 2.7% and the Nasdaq 100 index sank 3.5% in the worst daily sell-off since 10 April. The US 10-year government bond yield fell 11bps to 4.03%.

Investment strategy: We expect elevated market volatility in the near term, given the ongoing US government shutdown and re-escalation of trade tensions. Nevertheless, we continue to believe in the "Trump put" i.e. he would de-escalate if equities fall sharply and/or US growth and inflation are impacted. The US Q3 earnings season should provide fundamental support via AI-driven tech earnings. As such, we would tranche into our preferred equity markets (US and Asia-ex-Japan), with an initial tilt towards preferred defensive growth areas, including US healthcare and China high-dividend non-bank H shares. S&P500 has next support at 6,250; Hang Seng has support at 24,500.

Implications of renewed trade tensions

Overdue pullback. As highlighted in our last two Weekly Market View reports, US equities were poised for a pullback, with investor positioning at a bullish extreme (at 1.75 standard deviation) and valuations stretched heading into last Friday. Renewed trade tensions proved to be the catalyst for the latest pullback, driving a reversal in risk sentiment. Since 2010, combined US investor positioning has risen above 1.75 on eleven occasions. At these levels, upside for the S&P500 index has been capped at mid-single digits for the subsequent four months, while the risk of a 5-10% correction has risen significantly, based on Vanda Research.

US stagflation, China deflation risk. Renewed trade tensions could slow global growth, disrupt supply chains, revive inflation pressures in the US, and fuel deflation fears in the rest of the world near term.

In the US, we expect the softening labour market will support 50bps of Fed rate cuts this year, although Fed commentary needs to be closely watched for concerns about inflation due to higher tariffs. China's policymakers are likely to redouble efforts to stimulate self-reliant domestic-driven growth, focused on advanced technology.

What does this mean for investors?

Equities

Our View: Add US and China equities in tranches, with a tilt towards defensive growth (US healthcare, China high dividend non-bank H-shares). Add to US tech on further pullback. Use structures to monetise volatility and limit downside.

Rationale: We expect Trump to limit economic damage with the willingness to ease tensions should growth be thwarted. After Trump's "Liberation Day" tariff announcement in April, the S&P 500 fell by 12% over 6 days, before recovering to the pre-"Liberation Day" level in 24 days as he delayed tariffs. The imminent Q3 earnings season will be crucial to gauge if growth guidance warrants valuations. Fed rate cuts should be supportive. We see support for the S&P 500 at 6,250 and 5,900, where investors can consider adding exposure.

Similarly, we see support for the Hang Seng index at 24,500 and 23,000. China equities remain attractively valued. We expect Beijing to provide ample policy support to counter downside economic risks. As for US technology, we recommend turning more aggressive on an additional 5-10% correction. We also suggest using structured strategies to monetise volatility and provide downside support.

Bonds

Our view: Reduce long-dated US government bonds as the 10-year government bond yield approaches the lower bound of our 3-month range of 4.0%-4.25%. Add US inflation-protected bonds as inflation pressures are building on renewed tariff headlines.

Rationale: The US government bond market reacted with a classic "flight to safety" after the US announced new tariffs on China, causing the 10-year government bond yield to fall 11 basis points to 4.03%.

Weaker economic activity may continue to exert downward pressure on yields, while inflation risks from higher import costs could drive long-term yields higher. In the near term, given that the 10-year US government bond yield is now close to our 3-month lower bound of 4%, we recommend reducing long-dated US government bonds. Additionally, we suggest adding US inflation-protected bonds as a hedge against potential long-term inflation risks, amid rising protectionism against the backdrop of tightening immigration curbs.

FX

Our view: USD strength constrained by stagflation risk; CNH downside on policy expectations; Gold higher for longer.

Rationale: We expect renewed tariff tensions to reignite safe-haven demand. The USD may see initial upside pressure, though gains may fade as markets price in Fed rate cut and growing stagflation risk, which would soften dollar momentum. The USD index (DXY) faces significant resistance at the 200-day moving average (DMA) of 101.2.

USD/CNH is likely to break above its 50DMA of 7.1480 amid expectations that China will loosen monetary policy to counter increased deflationary risks amid rising trade uncertainty. Any sustained break higher in the pair would pave the path towards 7.1980.

Risk-off sentiment will likely sustain gold prices to stay "higher for longer". Although positioning looks extremely one-sided (bullish), strong momentum could drive gold towards USD 4,100/oz. Any near-term pullback would have technical support around USD 4,000/oz.

We see an opportunity to add to US equities gradually at support levels of 6,250 and 5,900 in the S&P500 index
