How does Standard Chartered Markets Post Trade work?

When you execute a trade with Standard Chartered, a trade confirmation document must be sent by Standard Chartered to you.

The document provides details of the trade, such as the trade date, the product purchased, buy/sell currencies and notional amounts.

The confirmation exchanged between the two counterparties acts as an agreement to the terms of the trade. Both counterparties should confirm the trade confirmation no later than two days after the trade date.

With Standard Chartered Markets Post Trade, you have easy access to view and confirm this document. Once you have confirmed the trade, this will instantly feed back into Standard Chartered's downstream system to complete the trade confirmation.

With Standard Chartered Markets Post Trade, you can enjoy:

Increased accessibility

24/7 access to manage trades and view audit trails of all confirmed trades

Increased efficiency

View and confirm multiple trades in one go through bulk confirmations

Reduced risk

Our digital platform removes the possible errors involved in manual processes

Full control

A self-serve tool for your post trade needs

Sustainable processes

Go paperless with online document storage

Leverage our full digital services

With a single login, you can access our full suite of services across trading, cash management, trade services and securities services
