PBoC delivers a positive surprise

Summary

China's central bank (PBoC) unveiled a policy support package covering a broad range of stimulus measures, including policy rate cuts, housing policy stimulus and stock market stabilization measures. These underline the authorities' commitment to stabilizing growth and restoring confidence.

Cuts to the policy rate, bank reserve ratio larger than expected. The PBoC said it will cut the policy rate from 1.7% to a record low of 1.5%. The reserve requirement rate (RRR) will be cut by 50bps, with an additional 25-50bps likely to follow before year end. Major Chinese equity indices rose by 4%, while the CNH strengthened.

We stay Neutral on China equities: The Hang Seng Index, having blown past our 18,750 target, is likely to enjoy further near-term momentum, given reasonable valuation (9x P/E) and uncrowded positioning. However, upside could be constrained by deflationary pressure and geopolitical risks, with technical resistance at 20,000.

Background

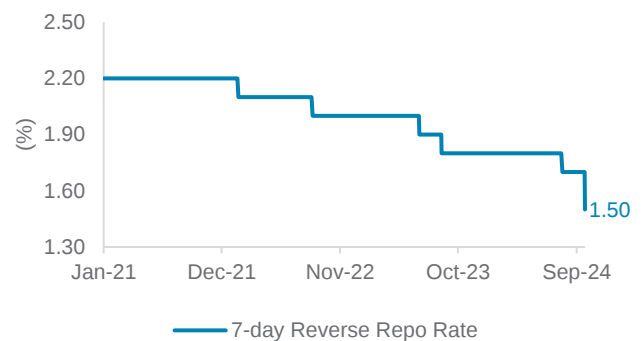

China's coordinated easing package came on the heels of weak August activity data prints released less than two weeks ago. These illustrated weaker-than-expected retail sales, industrial production and fixed asset investment. The Fed rate cuts last week, coupled with recent CNH strength, likely provided a window of opportunity for the PBoC to undertake more forceful monetary easing, which included:

- Housing stimulus policies: (1) The minimum mortgage downpayment ratio for second home purchases will be reduced from 25% to 15%, bringing in at par with the first home purchases. (2) Existing mortgage rates will be taken down to match the new mortgage rates. Average outstanding mortgages rates will decline by 50bps, which will translate into CNY150bn of annual interest expense savings, or 2.5% of annual disposable income per household, as per PBoC estimates.
- Stock market stabilization measures: The PBoC announced the setting up of a CNY500bn swap facility for non-bank financial institutions to borrow directly from the PBoC using bonds, stock ETFs and CSI 300 constituent stocks as collateral. An additional CNY300bn relending program will be set up for banks to support listed corporates' stock buyback activity.

Stocks and CNH strengthened: Improved sentiment towards risk assets lifted the Hang Seng Index and the onshore CSI 300 index by 4% yesterday. In reaction to the rate cut, USD/CNH initially rose, but then weakened by 0.4% to 7.03.

What does this mean for investors?

Policy easing alleviates growth concern. The package should help moderate concerns about China missing the government's full year GDP growth target of 5%. The package signals authorities' pro-growth stance and suggests further fiscal policy support and additional bond issuances in the forthcoming months are increasingly likely.

We stay Neutral on China equities, expecting modest near-term upside. The announced CNY800bn measures, representing approximately 2% of the onshore A-share's market cap, implies policymakers are placing an increasing emphasis on reviving market sentiment. In conjunction with the Fed's rate cut, we expect offshore China equities to benefit from fund inflows in the near term, given uncrowded positioning. Trading at 9x P/E, the Hang Seng Index could continue to enjoy near-term momentum and trade up to a 19,000-20,000 range. For the index to sustainably break above 20,000, markets will likely need to see improving economic prints, fading deflationary pressure, and lessening geopolitical risks.

We continue to favour selectively positioning into high-dividend non-bank state-owned enterprises (SOEs) and high-quality growth equities more broadly. In a declining rate environment, we favour non-bank high dividend SOEs. We are also overweight the consumer discretionary, technology, and communication services sectors.

Further CNH strength likely to be limited. Improved sentiment towards China's risk assets is supportive of a stable CNH. While USD/CNH has fallen to a one year high of 7.03, further CNH strength is likely to be limited by expectations of an additional RRR cut. Also, technical charts argue USD/CNH is close to oversold.

Risks to the outlook: Fiscal policy support may come in a more measured pace, given declining fiscal revenues, or could surprise on the upside should there be ample new government bond issuances. Stimulus measures may not bring about a sustained recovery of property prices and sentiment if the job market does not improve. Geopolitical risks and trade tensions going into and after the US elections is another key risk.
